The present invention relates to the building art, and more particularly to composite building components for use in erecting building structures. The invention is particularly suited for use in the erection of prefabricated, pre-engineered building components and will be described with particular reference thereto. It will be appreciated, however, that the invention may also be used to advantage in the construction of other types of building components and in the erection of other types of buildings. A prefabricated building component generally includes a metallic framework having a plurality of spaces therein which are filled with hardenable building materials. Usually, the component is erected by the use of a crane, the framework being lifted into place and then lowered within the component. Some building components, however, are so heavy that they may not be readily handled by cranes and other conventional lifting devices, and even when they can be moved, a certain amount of manual labor is usually required for positioning and/or lowering the components. This may be especially true when building components of any size must be raised or lowered and manipulated into place. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide an improved building component which may be handled with conventional equipment and which may be easily lifted and lowered. It is a further object of the invention to provide an improved building component which is easily constructed from a plurality of interconnected building blocks or modules. It is a further object of the invention to provide an improved building component which is light in weight and which is easily moved without the use of large, complicated or expensive machinery. It is a still further object of the invention to provide an improved building component which is simple in design and which is highly resistant to damage during transport and erection. It is another object of the invention to provide an improved building component which is compact in design and which may be used to advantage as a building base for a variety of buildings. The present invention contemplates an improved building component comprising a plurality of interconnected modules, the modules being made of a metallic material, each module having at least
