Women who had been raped as children were twice as likely to become victims of sexual assault in their lifetime than women who had not been raped, according to a landmark new study. A Canadian team of researchers at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver examined data on more than 1,000 women who were abused as children, aged 13 to 17, and more than 300 women who were not sexually abused. The team found that for every woman who was abused as a child, another faced a sexual assault. They published their findings in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The study found that almost a third of the child sexual abuse survivors (31%) reported being sexually assaulted as adults. The findings are "striking" and "troubling", say the authors, a group of researchers led by Heather Evans and Lorraine McLennan, who completed the study at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver. The authors write: "Children who are sexually abused by parents, brothers, uncles, or other relatives are at an elevated risk of sexual victimisation themselves." "It is therefore important for clinicians and other community-based professionals to evaluate sexual victimisation risk of sexually abused children and other children in their families. "Despite the high prevalence of childhood sexual abuse, more than three-quarters of the women in our study had not previously disclosed their abuse to anyone, and of those who had disclosed to someone in their life, most had done so to a family member or close friend.

A new DNA probe for a serotype D strain of avian adenovirus. A new DNA probe for the type D strain of avian adenovirus (AAV) was constructed from the E1 region of a type C strain by inserting the E1 region into the plasmid pBR325 and cloning it into pHSG406. The nucleotide sequence of the E1 region (1267 bp) of the type D strain of AAV was determined, and the insert of the plasmid, designated pE1-11, was found to correspond to a part of the left end of the DNA genome of AAV. The serotypes of AAV in turkey poult were determined by the hybridization between pE1-11 and RNA from a tissue homogenate of infected poult

What's New In?

Scrawlr is an approachable and speedy application that performs quick scans on your website's pages to check for SQL injection vulnerabilities, which you can analyze to troubleshoot issues as well as export data to a local file. Clear-cut installation and interface After a fast and uneventful setup operation, you are welcomed by a standard window with a clear-cut structure, representing Scrawlr's interface. You can get started by typing or pasting the URL of the website you wish to scan and let Scrawlr handle the rest. This task may take a long time, depending on the size of the target. Unfortunately, the app doesn't implement an option for limiting the depth level, so it verifies all links originating from the given URL. During this time you can check out the full URL path of the current attack, along with the total crawling and auditing pages. The task may be paused anytime to temporarily allocate resources to other running applications. View and save SQL vulnerabilities The utility has a tree view for displaying results with web pages containing SQL vulnerabilities, giving you the possibility to examine information and export it to file for later inspection and safekeeping. Moreover, you can copy any selected URLs to the Clipboard by simply opening the right-click menu of a tree view entry, apply a simple proxy configuration for connecting to the Internet (host and port), view a Scrawlr summary, as well as create and manage a list of allowed hosts. Evaluation and conclusion There were no stability issues in our tests, thanks to the fact that the software tool didn't freeze, crash or prompt error messages. It carried out scan jobs in reasonable time while remaining light on system resources consumption. All in all, Scrawlr may not be a professional tool, but it provides you with a fast and easy method to detect and investigate SQL vulnerabilities for your
