Game "Medieval Madness" Gameplay: When I first started thinking about making the game, I did not know English, czech or math. I started thinking about the fantasy/medieval atmosphere that I love and thought: Why not just make that? But it is not a simple thing to make something like that, so I started thinking about why would you make it, what is the goal? Is it a little adventure game? Is it a skill test? I am not sure what to think I could probably make a question or two on our blog about this. I started thinking about my goals. I love the atmosphere of fantasy, the atmosphere of medieval, it can be fun and serious with the characters. I love to play fantasy games and have for years. I love to write fantasy because I love to write and I know so many worlds are there. I thought about making that, but in a way that I do not know how to solve the problem of the initial education So I took a challenge: "I see what the players do, and I do what the players should do." which is the famous "the only way to know what to do, is to ask the players", which is true when it is not about hacking the game, and you just want to know how to play "the second way", is to make a game and see what the players do in it. It is somewhat abstract, but it is a challenge to play something that you can't fully understand. I thought about what to write and how to write it. I chose the whole world in the dream of a Medieval castle that the player goes from one to another, but not through a list. That is, each castle has the entrance, exits and challenges. But I did not know what to write. I have written on our blog a bit about the subject, because I have been thinking about the subject, but the longer I write the less the effort has been. I started thinking about writing a little about the game, and realized that the game was written so well that it is much better to let the game tell its own story. So I wrote Jung's Labyrinth as a novel, not based on the

 on Mars NASA has given up on Mars – and now believes there was once life on the Red Planet. The space agency has touched down with its latest set of sensors on a rocky surface. The mission will uncover what's causing wind erosion. Also, Ziya Moti, the author and filmmaker, completes season 3 of his series, Black Hole Blues. Transcript NASA riffs on ancient Mars (BEGIN VIDEOTAPE) JULIE CASIMIR, CNN CORRESPONDENT: We're reporting live from NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California, where the first "rovers" of NASA's new mission to Mars are being revealed today. We got our first peek at the strange, rust-colored surface of Mars earlier this year when the Phoenix Lander landed and saw the wind-sculpted, sandy terrain dubbed "Stones." And there is no question that the red planet has moved on. So, now, this new mission appears to have it all. It's going to pinpoint, in the next few weeks, the chemical elements that are responsible for the wind scour that sculpted the landscape on Mars. This will tell us, as a first -- as a first test -- what the weather looks like on Mars. And this mission isn't the only one NASA's got in store for a series of robotic landings on Mars. Another mission, "Curiosity," will touch down later this year, and there are two others that will follow. Together, they're forming a revolution in our understanding of the newest planet we've learned to explore. Why are those ridges on Mars? What are those dunes that are seen? What is the color of the Mars that we see? Is it really the color of the ground, or is it the soil that's been redeposited? As famous astronaut Buzz Aldrin once said, "I'd like to be proven wrong by future missions. But by the time they're ready, I won't be there to be proven wrong." He was referring, of course, to the Soviet Union's failed Mars program. However, today, scientists do not understand the past as well as they want to. So, there's a lot of excitement when we come across that little piece of Mars that seems to change everything that we think we knew -- their first drive on the surface of Mars in 30 years. It's a revolutionary event. And

Draw horror from the shadows. Make the best of an alternate reality. Cultist Simulator is a Lovecraftian card game inspired by the original adventure of the same name. Cultists are people who play by their own rules – and set their own traps. Rather than simply playing cards in a grander cosmic mystery or thematic framework, Cultist Simulator is a novel open-world experience based on the original rules of the tabletop game. As players, we must work together to solve a series of disturbing mysteries. Each one has its own flavor of horror, betrayal and surprise – but will only be revealed in the context of the campaign, where no two stories will be the same. Cultist Simulator is a standalone application which operates entirely outside of Steamworks. This means it will never require a persistent online connection, it will never have online leaderboards, and none of the content provided by the Steam Workshop will be accessible. Instruments of Horror With a team of dedicated and hardworking staff, Cultist Simulator has been created with high standards of craftsmanship. At its core, the game is based upon the Cthulhu Mythos – a body of work that has been entertaining readers since 1920 with its iconic characters and first-person investigations into the mysteries of the cosmos. However, the Mythos isn't just a series of novels that are passively read. The Mythos is about actively playing in a living storyworld – but one with a tragic, cosmic conclusion. Our aim is to impart those elements through a brand new twist on the RPG genre – one with the Lovecraftian theme, but with an emphasis on investigation and communication. In the game, as well as playing cards, you will also be able to talk with the dead. Hire mediums with different personalities to help you communicate with the departed and seek their advice. Unearth Stories One of the essential elements of Lovecraftian storyworlds is that of incidental details. Novelists like Lovecraft and Lovecraftian Horror writer Scott Carthy have developed a knack for poring over such details and unfolding new truths from the dust on the surface. We've made a deliberate choice to set our game in a contemporary setting. That means this is the kind of world which we can use to build richly details populated with things that could be discovered - and it allows the player to make their own discoveries. Of course, the player can also use the equipment and information that has been given to them to uncover mysteries that were not even intended. Since the
